We have isolated a gene, designated MMNalpha1, that is expressed in human melanoma cells. This gene was isolated based on expression pattern and sequence similarity to a previously isolated human gene, MMNalpha2, which was shown to be the alpha-subunit of the MMN gene product expressed in mouse spermatocytes. Sequence analysis of MMNalpha1 reveals that this gene encodes a bifunctional protein with a conserved and a nonconserved part. The conserved portion of MMNalpha1 is similar to other transcription factors that are known to function in cell proliferation and differentiation. In contrast, the nonconserved domain of this protein is highly divergent from any sequence known to be part of a protein or to function in transcription. The expression of MMNalpha1 in melanoma cells is independent of the state of differentiation. However, MMNalpha1 is rapidly down-regulated following mitogenic stimulation. This strongly suggests that the MMN gene product plays a role in the maintenance of the proliferative state of melanoma cells and that it may represent a target for antineoplastic agents.

Lord of the Rings – Part 6: “The Shire” Six little acts of kindness, miraculous acts, and noble deeds over the course of six magical days take us from Fellowship to Shire. While evil has been around it's never been as bad or as significant as in recent weeks. Is that good or bad? Kudos to the composer, Michael Morpurgo, for reminding us that kindness, compassion, and doing what is right are a unifying, defining, and socially changing force in life. Kindness is a time warp. This first act is dedicated to a man who is, in many ways, my hero – Alistair Crolok. It's his area that I call home, but I know he's worked in many places, including Canada, and has brought much healing to his world and many people. He's also brought many of us together, and we love him for that. * * * * *
